

Plumbing and Gasfitting

‘Women can do anything, as long as we set our minds to it.’

Natalia

Plumbing and Gasfitting

Apprentice Plumber

Originally, Natalia went to university to study health science, but after finding that she wasn't enjoying it, she switched to working in retail while she considered what her next move would be.

After checking out WelTec's plumbing programme online, Natalia decided it was time to try something different. Plumbing doesn't attract many females, so Natalia knew she'd be one of few.

Natalia was eligible for the Māori and Pacific Trades Training scholarship (MPTT), which was incredibly helpful considering she was still paying off her student loan from university. Not only did it cover all her fees, but it also paid for a pair of steel-cap boots and her driver's licence, essential tools for her job now.

Studying was intimidating at first, but the effort Natalia's tutors put into making the students feel comfortable and welcome put her worries at ease. She received incredible support from her tutors, including regular check-ins which she wasn't used to coming from university.

Natalia and the other students in her class learned all the basic knowledge and expertise they needed, so that when it came time to apply for a job, they were well prepared.

Meeting people in the community is one of Natalia's favourite parts of the job. She finds it so rewarding being able to fix something that many people take for granted – like a working toilet, a hot shower, or clean drinking water.

Natalia encourages anyone thinking of getting into trades to go for it. “It opens the door to so many opportunities – there are so many avenues you can go down and you'll meet people in different areas of the industry that will come in handy.

“You can go anywhere in the world with trade skills, and you'll always have a job.

One day, Natalia would love to own her own company. She wants to inspire other women to get into the trade and would love to hire some female apprentices.
